

Dr. Chandra Carr, PhD, MSW

CEO & FOUNDER

Chandra Carr is a Social Worker by trade and is dedicated to helping individuals in low socioeconomic environments that are in a disadvantage state concerning their mental health, physical health, and academic environment. She has over 13 years of experience working with children and adults in the mental health, developmentally disabled, homeless, and public health field. Dr. Carr has also been fortunate to work with children and adults, who are delinquent, emotionally impaired, cognitively impaired, developmentally disabled, incarcerated, and suffer from diagnosed psychiatric disorders. While working with these individuals, she has learned how to strengthen and empower them and their families to interact effectively with their environment.

Various positions have also provided her with the leadership and management ability to create innovative programming for children, adolescents, and adults that will progressively prepare them to better themselves and their community through cognitive behavioral recognition and choice analysis. These management opportunities have allowed Dr. Carr to be heavily involved with family learning, parent involvement, entrepreneurship, youth development, and community integration.

Dr. Carr noticed that the view of human services, business, and education has changed in a new and exciting way. Her doctoral achievement allowed her to have a greater capability and a stronger determination to go beyond direct service, as well as enlarging professional services in managerial and scholarly avenues. These skills have illuminate and launch an assured victory within the community. Dr. Carr created Miller-Carr Human Services (MCHS) in 2016 after serving as the CEO for The Redeemed Counseling and Social Services for 9 years. As the CEO of MCHS, Dr. Carr leads efforts that grow and support children and families within the community. She addresses the mental, behavioral, social, and economic needs of individuals in Wayne and Oakland Counties. She uses and exercises her skills of creativity and critical thinking, as well as obtaining knowledge that improves daily life of current and future generations. Her gift is to work with special populations of adolescent youth, specifically girls.

Chandra Carr has obtained a PhD in Counseling from Capella University, a Master of Social Work degree from the University of Michigan, and a Bachelor of Science degree in Family Community Service from Michigan State University.
